HEMPHIS APPEAL

For the Memphis Appeal MAY BELLE COCKE. OBIIT, JUNE 15, 1867. Whom the Gods love, die young. Gone to her God

Ere her young heart had learned to know The pangs of grief, the shafts of woe-Ere her young feet in sin had trad, We laid her neath the cool, green sod To rest, to-day one year ago. Gone to her God ! A fair young flower, She bloomed upon the earth a day, Too sweet for earth, she passed away Into a fairer, greener bower.

God in His love, as in His power, Claimed for himself our darling May, Our sweet May-flower. For though the deep, heart-rending sigh Vells from the heart, we closed thine eye

Forever in a quiet sleep,

Gave vent to grief so strong, so deep-But we'd not call thee from the sky. No more we weep! It was thy gain To find sweet life and calm repose Where new-born life in beauty g'ows Far from this world of strife and pain. Ere thy pure soul had known a stain To 'scape from earth and all its woes-Ah, 'twas thy gain!

Gone to her home! Upon a loving Savior's breast She finds the soul's sweet, lasting rest, While we 'mid fear and peril roam. But we shall meet in that blue dome Where gather all the loved and blest, Shall meet-st home!
